About 800 homeless people are already being housed at the facility

BY GARY WARTH

SAN DIEGO — Because San Diego County’s homeless shelter is already at capacity, the Convention Center Shelter will have to expand.

The Convention Center Shelter is one of the county’s four temporary shelters for homeless people. The others are the San Diego-South Bay Shelter, the Shelters of possibilities and the Alpine Village Shelter.

The Convention Center Shelter is currently at capacity with 380 people, said Barbara L. Filer, a county social worker who manages the shelter. The shelter, however, has a capacity of 500 people.

The shelter is currently located at the San Diego Convention Center. It opened on Monday and is being operated by the storm shelter’s management and staff.

On Tuesday, Filer said the shelter had to be expanded to accommodate the homeless.

The Convention Center Shelter is managed by the San Diego Department of Public Health.

San Diego County is experiencing a homeless crisis.

The convention center shelter was opened in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, which has caused a surge in the number of homeless people in the county.

The shelter has been in operation since March 2020 and has housed more than 10,000 people since then.

The shelter has 500 beds, but the county is working to expand its capacity to 800 beds.

The shelter is located in the middle of the city and is easily accessible by bus or train.

The shelter provides basic needs such as food, clothing, and shelter.

The shelter has a medical clinic and is staffed by a nurse and a medical assistant.

The shelter is also staffed by social workers and other volunteers.

The shelter is open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

The shelter is currently housing people who are experiencing homelessness and are in need of a safe place to stay.

The shelter is located in the heart of downtown San Diego.
